The 2d Logistical Command (C) had the continuing primary mission of furnishing logistical support to the United States, United Nations and Republic of Korea troops operating with, and supporting the Eighth United States Army. In addition to providing supplies and services for this Army, the 2d Logistical Command (C) furnished supplies, facilities and services to United States and Republic of Korea Air Forces, Marine and Naval Forces. This general support mission was accomplished in spite of adverse conditions of terrain, extremes of climate and weather, and a shortage of proper operating facilities.

In addition to the purely military activities, assistance was rendered to the civilian population in various forms. Electrical power was supplied to augment civilian power sources. Military and civilian fire-fighting agencies joined forces and worked together to control disastrous fires which several times threatened both military and civilian supplies and thousands of homes. Extensive communications facilities were made available during this period to the Republic of Korea Government officials and agencies when the provisional capital was located in Pusan.

tical Command (C) handled well over a million measurement tons monthly of cargo, which included Commodities for civilian relief and for the rehabilitation of Korean industry and commerce. These tonnages handled were more than twice the rated capability of the organizations charged with the mission, and were supplied at a critical time for the preservation of life and property, especially among the refugee population.

The exchange of thousands of sick and wounded prisoners of war in June 1953 and the general exchange of over eighty thousand prisoners of war in August and September 1953, placed additional responsibilities on the 2d Logistical Command (C). These missions were performed in an exemplary manner.

The 2d Logistical Command (C) provided technical training to various Republic of Korea Army technical service organizations to assist them in accomplishing their missions. As a result of this training, the Republic of Korea Forces have been able to assume a great part of the responsibility for engineering, medical and other technical service operations. This training in all the technical services has provided immediate results in improved efficiency of Republic of Korea Army service units.

The efficiency with which the responsibilities of the 2d Logistical Command (C) were discharged was due to the individual efforts of everyone concerned. The resulting services and assistance, accomplished under difficult conditions, is an inspiration to all free peoples and is in keeping with the highest traditions of the United States Army, the military service and the United Nations.
