Lieutenant Colonel Edmund Castle, Artillery, United States Army, distinguished himself by heroism while serving as Commanding Officer, 1st Missile Battalion (NIKE-HERCULES), 65th Artillery, Naha Air Base, Okinawa, on 26 May 1959. When a fire occurred during a joining operation of the warhead of a Nike-Hercules missile, Colonel Castle immediately ordered the evacuation of the entire launcher area and proceeded to the exclusion site where the missile was being prepared. Assisted by three members of the command, he removed the hatch covers to locate the fire and was met by thick smoke billowing from the access doors, making it difficult to locate the source of the fire inside. After discovering the fire, despite great danger of a possible detonation of the warhead, he assisted in disconnecting, extinguishing, and removing a burning cable, and eliminated the grave threat of the safety of all personnel in the area. Colonel Castle's prompt actions, unselfish concern for his own personal safety, and calm presence of mind in this spontaneous emergency averted possible injury to personnel and damage to Government property and materiel, reflecting the utmost credit upon himself and the military service.

Master Sergeant Edward L. Hodges, Signal Corps, United States Army, a member of Detachment 1, United States Army Alaska Communication System, Anchorage, Alaska, distinguished himself by heroism on 13 September 1959. Sergeant Hodges was a passenger on a boat cruising on Lake Bennett, British Columbia, when the craft capsized, throwing all six passengers into the icy water. Observing that one member of the party had been stunned by a blow on the head as the boat overturned, and was floating away from the boat, Sergeant Hodges immediately and with complete disregard for his own personal safety, swam out to rescue the victim. As the drifting nonswimmer regained consciousness, she panicked and dragged Sergeant Hodges under the water several times before he was able to get her back to the boat. Despite the fact that he was in a state of complete exhaustion and at a peril to the safety of his own life, Sergeant Hodges tenaciously held on to the drowning woman and remained to assist her by preventing her from slipping back into the chilly, glacier-fed lake. Sergeant Hodges' unselfish determination, strong courage, and heroic actions undoubtedly saved the victim from drowning, and reflect the utmost credit upon himself and the military service.

Chief Warrant Officer William J. Pickett, Artillery, United States Army, distinguished himself by heroism while serving as Materiel Assistant, Battery D, 1st Missile Battalion (NIKE-HERCULES), 65th Artillery, Naha Air Base, Okinawa, on 26 May 1959. When a fire occurred during a joining operation of the warhead of a Nike-Hercules missile, Warrant Officer Pickett immediately cleared the area of personnel and, after reporting the incident to proper authority, proceeded without delay to the exclusion site where the missile was being prepared. Together with three other members of the command, Warrant Officer Pickett assisted in removing the hatch covers and was met by thick billowing smoke from the access doors, making it difficult to locate the source of the fire inside. After discovering the fire, despite great danger of a possible detonation, he assisted in disconnecting, extinguishing, and removing a burning cable, and eliminated the grave threat to the safety of all personnel in the area. Warrant Officer Pickett's prompt actions, unselfish concern for his own personal safety, and calm presence of mind in this spontaneous emergency averted possible injury to personnel and damage to Government property and materiel, reflecting the utmost credit upon himself and the military service.

Sergeant First Class Chester Piotrowski, Artillery, United States Army, distinguished himself by heroism while serving as a member of Battery D, 1st Missile Battalion (NIKE-HERCULES), 65th Artillery, Naha Air Base, Okinawa, on 26 May 1959. Upon being informed of a fire which developed during a joining operation of the warhead of a Nike-Hercules missile, Sergeant Piotrowski proceeded immediately to the launcher area to assist in an investigation. After reporting the incident to proper authority, he returned without delay to the exclusion site where the missile was being prepared. Together with three other members of the command, Sergeant Piotrowski assisted in removing the hatch covers and was met by thick billowing smoke from the access doors, making it difficult to locate the source of the fire inside. After discovering the fire, despite great danger of a possible detonation of the warhead, he assisted in disconnecting, extinguishing, and removing a burning cable, and eliminated the grave threat to the safety of all personnel in the area. Sergeant Piotrowski's prompt actions, unselfish concern for his own personal safety, and calm presence of mind in this spontaneous emergency averted possible injury to personnel and damage to Government property and materiel, reflecting the utmost credit upon himself and the military service.

Chief Warrant Officer Joseph J. Roseborough, United States Army, distinguished himself by heroism while serving as Materiel Assistant, Battery D, 1st Missile Battalion (NIKE-HERCULES), 65th Artillery, Naha Air Base, Okinawa, on 26 May 1959. When a fire occurred during a joining operation of the warhead of a Nike-Hercules missile, Warrant Officer Roseborough immediately cleared the area of personnel and, after reporting the incident to proper authority, proceeded without delay to the exclusion site where the missile was being prepared. Together with three other members of the command, Warrant Officer Roseborough assisted in removing the hatch covers and was met by thick billowing smoke from the access doors, making it difficult to locate the source of the fire inside. After discovering the fire, despite great danger of a possible detonation, he assisted in disconnecting, extinguishing, and removing a burning cable, and eliminated the grave threat to the safety of all personnel in the area. Warrant Officer Roseborough's prompt actions, unselfish concern for his own personal safety, and calm presence of mind in this spontaneous emergency averted possible injury to personnel and damage to Government property and materiel, reflecting the utmost credit upon himself and the military service.

Second Lieutenant Lorie J. Vale, Infantry, United States Army, distinguished himself by heroism on 25 January 1960, while a member of Headquarters Company, 4th Training Regiment, United States Army Training Center, Armor, Fort Knox, Kentucky. Lieutenant Vale was performing duty as an Instructor and Safety Officer on Purol Range when a trainee undergoing instruction in live fragmentation grenade handling dropped an activated grenade in the throwing pit in an attempted toss and froze with fear. Quickly recognizing the trainee's inability to react to oral command, Lieutenant Vale physically removed the trainee from the immediate vicinity of the danger area, threw him to the ground, and using his own body as a shield, fell upon the soldier to protect him from the explosive blast. As a result of Lieutenant Vale's presence of mind and quick actions the soldier suffered only a minor shrapnel wound in the thigh. Lieutenant Vale's prompt courage and unselfish regard for his own life in this sudden emergency saved the soldier from serious injury or death, and reflect the utmost credit upon himself and the military service.

Private Fred E. Zimmer, RA United States Army, distinguished himself by heroism on 27 December 1950. Private Zimmer and a companion were travelling by automobile along Wilbur Boulevard, Poughkeepsie, New York, when they saw a child in the road crying for help. They stopped and followed the child down the hill to Bulls Head Pond where they heard the screams of two children who had fallen through the ice while skating. Private Zimmer and his companion partly walked and then crawled on the cracking ice to where the drowning children were bobbing up and down in the icy water. While his companion held his feet, Private Zimmer went into the water head first and managed to pull the children from the water and to safety. His courageous and unselfish action in risking his life in this hazardous situation undoubtedly saved the children from death by drowning, and reflects great credit upon himself and the military service.
